An assistant professor at Brigham Young University has been suspended from teaching a course, ordered to participate in anger management classes, and recommended for treatment after writing a paper attacking same-sex marriage that was published in a conservative Mormon journal. The Rev. Gregory A. Potter has been the director of the university's campus ministry since August. Potter's paper was published last week in a special edition of the Faith and Freedom magazine. In an interview Monday, Potter said he has never felt singled out for his paper or his religion. "My views on homosexual behavior are the same as everyone else's," he said. "I just write the papers." In his paper, Potter said marriage should be defined as a relationship between one man and one woman. "Marriage between man and woman is not just an institution, but also a sacrament that teaches and sustains man and woman," Potter wrote. "Whether we like it or not, this is a unique and an irreplaceable part of our culture." The magazine later said the paper was written under the supervision of the BYU Religious Education department and had been reviewed by the university's Provost's Advisory Committee. Potter said he was notified of the paper's publication late last week. He was told he was suspended as a professor pending an investigation by BYU's Office of Religious Education. The suspension, which took effect immediately, prevented Potter from teaching in any class, advising students or being involved in the university's counseling programs, Potter said. He said the suspension will continue for up to two weeks and could extend as long as one semester. "I'm hoping that the Provost's Advisory Committee and the Office of Religious Education will ultimately determine that the facts of my paper did not warrant such a harsh response," he said. Potter said he wrote the paper in response to an article in the newspaper that featured the story of a gay couple in his native Australia. The story was about a divorce, he said, and included the couple's divorce proceedings. Potter said he noticed a trend of 2d92ce491b
