The aim of this study was to evaluate the outcome of patients supported with a VAD for acute reversible cardiogenic shock (ARCS) and to identify the risk factors for adverse outcome. All patients treated with a VAD in the Interventional Cardiology Department of the University of Milan between January 2011 and December 2015 were retrospectively reviewed. During the study period, 45 patients were treated with a VAD for ARCS (median age: 58 years, 36 males). Median interval between VAD implant and circulatory shock was 4 days. Mean circulatory support time was 8 days. Survival at 30 days was 85.6%. VAD explantation for infection was needed in five cases (11.1%). A low cardiac index and low blood pressure at the time of admission were associated with adverse outcome. Patients requiring vasopressors at the time of admission and patients treated for ARCS for more than 5 days were more likely to have adverse outcome. During a follow-up of 24.2 ± 22.4 months, 15 patients (33.3%) received heart transplantation, 12 patients (26.7%) underwent heart retransplantation, and 18 patients (40%) were still alive. In conclusion, a VAD implant for ARCS is feasible and can be associated with excellent long-term outcome. A low cardiac index and low blood pressure at the time of admission are associated with a worse outcome. 2d92ce491b
