While the country had moved forward in economic, political and social terms, its emotional and political domains, the inter-State relationships remained mired in a policy-making paralysis. The political institutions of the Federation had been set up with a view to giving a constitutional form to the Indiranagar association, the first step in the process of evolution. The Constitution-making Committee had been appointed and a Provisional Constitution had been framed. A Centenary Commission had been set up and a three-year, ten-volume history of the movement for a separate state of Telangana was in process of publication. There were two wings of the Telangana Movement. The National wing, in sympathy with the Nehruvian ideals, was an academic and philosophical movement. The second wing, the political wing, saw the struggle of the farmers, peasants and working classes for an independent Telangana. It is the first class of schools in the private sector, which was established in the year 1972 as the first residential school in Hyderabad, with only one class. A round-the-clock ambulance service was introduced in the city with a permanent ambulance station set up at Km 3 of the road. The service was taken up initially by K. Uttam Kumar Reddy, who had been the president of the movement, and who was badly injured in an attack by the State police, when he had gone to meet Subash Chandra Bose. P. Social development The Andhra Pradesh State Legislature passed the Maratha Constitution Bill, the Maratha Affairs (Autonomy) Bill, the Urban Development and Irrigation Bill, the Public Works Bill and the Hyderabad Development (Special Provisions) Bill on March 26, 1956.
