Using the keymaster utility, you can enable your keyboard to function as a macro recorder. With macros, you are able to record arbitrary keystrokes and commands, from within your favorite applications. These are stored and used later, for purposes of performing faster and easier operations later on. I suggest using Keymacro so that you can record actions or keystrokes when you find yourself repeating an often used procedure. Allows you to set up your own keyboard shortcuts

The Keymacro application enables you to assign your own keyboard shortcuts to existing or custom commands. The application will be your guide, providing you with a list of available commands. You can then choose a command, and assign it to your own keyboard shortcut. Once you are done, you simply need to restart the computer, and your new keyboard command will be ready to be used.

How to setup your own commands Keymacro offers three ways to setup your own commands. You can use an XML file to define your keyboard shortcuts, assign individual keyboard shortcuts to a group of commands, or use a command file to assign keyboard shortcuts to a collection of existing commands.

How to save keyboard shortcuts Once you've defined your own keyboard commands, save them by setting a keyboard shortcut. That's it, you've now just saved your keyboard shortcuts to a file.

How to load keyboard shortcuts If you want to load your saved keyboard shortcuts, simply double click on the file and your keyboard shortcuts will be applied and ready to be used. Allows you to choose what your keyboard shortcuts do

The third way that you can define a keyboard shortcut is by choosing what the keyboard shortcut does. For example, if you want to define a keyboard shortcut to open a file in a new tab in your browser, you simply select the browser, and choose your new keyboard shortcut from the "More Actions" menu. You can also assign a keyboard shortcut to open files in a specific application, such as to open a file in your word processor, or to open a file in your mail client. The Keymacro application comes with three additional options in the "More Actions" menu:

- * - Open in Finder This action is only available when you select the "Open File" command from the list of commands in the application.
- * - Open in Windows File Explorer When you select the "Open File" command, this action will be offered to you.
- * - Open with Google Chrome Google Chrome is a free web browser from Google.
