1. Field of the Invention The invention relates to a semiconductor device having gate electrode (hereafter referred to as a metal oxide semiconductor field-effect transistor or MOSFET), and particularly a method of manufacturing a MOSFET having a gate insulator, which is formed by a chemical oxide growth method, by using a method of growing an oxide film, which is different from the chemical oxide growth method.
2. Description of the Related Art The characteristics of a semiconductor device become more and more excellent as the thickness of a gate insulator is decreased. A gate insulator formed by a chemical oxide growth method is largely applied to a MOSFET having a channel length on the order of nanometer. There is a method of using a silicon oxynitride film or a silicon oxide nitride film as a gate insulator formed by the chemical oxide growth method. However, the thickness of the silicon oxynitride film is as large as 10 nm or more, and the silicon oxide nitride film is hardly used as a gate insulator because of high interface states. In order to solve this problem, it has been proposed to reduce the thickness of a gate insulator to several nanometers. A gate insulator can be formed by a chemical oxide growth method even when the thickness of the gate insulator is decreased to 5 to 10 nm or less. There is an existing method of using a gate insulator, which has a low interface state, a
